INTRODUCTION

This action is before the court on crossmotions for partial summary judgment. Oral argument was heard on the matter on March 5, 1984. After having considered all memoranda submitted by the parties and the arguments of counsel, the court concludes for the reasons set forth below that plaintiffs' motion for partial summary must be granted, and defendants' motion denied.

1 FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2 Plaintiffs are the Hoopa Valley Tribe ("Tribe") and the 3 Hoopa Timber Corporation ("HTC"), a wholly-owned enterprise of 4 the Tribe. Defendants are the California State Board of 5 Equalization ("Board"), five individual members of the Board, 6 and the State of California. Plaintiffs challenge application
7 of the timber yield tax established by the 1976 California
8 Forest Taxation Reform Act (Cal. Rev. & Tax. Code §§38101 - 9 38908), which is levied on "timber owners" against the value 10 of timber at the time of harvest.

11 Timber on the reservation is held in trust for the Tribe 12 by the United States and is sold annually by the Bureau of 13 Indian Affairs ("BIA") through competitive bidding. When HTC
14 is the successful bidder it buys from BIA and after processing 15 the timber sells to off-reservation companies. On its face 16 the timber yield tax applies to private companies who buy 17 directly from BIA. Cal. Rev. & Tax. Code §38104 provides that 18 "timber owner" includes "the first person who acquires either 19 the legal title or beneficial title to timber after it has 20 been felled or any other person or agency or entity from land 21 owned by a federal agency exempt from property taxation under 22 the Constitution or laws of the United States...." Defendants 23 have not attempted to assess the tax directly against HTC when 24 it is the successful bidder who purchases from BIA. However, 25 the Board, which is charged with enforcing the tax, has ruled 26 that the tax applies to purchases by private companies from 27 HTC. A property tax rule has defined "timber owner" as "the 28

1 first nonexempt person" who "acquires either the legal title
2 or beneficial title to timber after it has been felled." Cal.
3 Admin. Code Pub. Rev. R. 1026 (1980).

4 Plaintiffs challenge the application of the tax both to 5 private companies who buy directly from BIA and to private 6 companies who buy from HTC, on grounds of federal preemption
7 and infringement of tribal sovereignty. Because the court
8 concludes that the state tax is preempted by federal law, it 9 does not reach the issue of tribal sovereignty.

10 DISCUSSION

11 The parties agreed at oral argument that the analysis of 12 this case must be guided by the Supreme Court's decision in 13 White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 U.S. 136 (1980).^{1/}

14 In White Mountain the court held that motor carrier and use 15 fuel taxes imposed by Arizona on a non-Indian logging company 16 operating on an Indian reservation were invalid because 17 preempted by federal law. The Court determined that either 18 preemption by federal law or infringement on tribal sover-19 eignty could bar the application of state law to activity on 20 the reservation or by tribal members. Id. at 142-43.

21 Emphasizing that preemption standards which have been 22 developed in other areas are unhelpful in analyzing preemption 23 as it relates to Indian tribes, the Court called for "a 24 particularized inquiry into the nature of the state, federal, 25 and tribal interests at stake, an inquiry designed to 26 determine whether, in the specific context, the exercise of 27 state authority would violate federal law." Id. at 145.

28

1 Using this as the framework, the Court then examined in 2 detail the extent of the federal government's regulation of 3 the harvesting of Indian timber and concluded that it was 4 comprehensive, with the BIA exercising "literally daily 5 supervision over the harvesting and management of tribal 6 timber." Id. at 147. The Court also concluded that the 7 federal government exercised detailed supervision over BIA 8 roads on the reservation. Finding the federal regulatory 9 scheme pervasive, the Court concluded that assessment of state 10 taxes would obstruct federal policies and that defendants had 11 identified no service performed by the state that would 12 justify assessment of taxes for activities on BIA and tribal 13 roads. Id. at 148-49.

14 The Court identified several ways in which the taxes 15 would obstruct federal policy. First:

16 At the most general level, the taxes would 17 threaten the overriding federal objective of 18 guaranteeing Indians that they will "receive 19 ... the benefit of whatever profit [the 20 forest] is capable of yielding..." 25 C.F.R.
21 §141.3(a)(3) (1979). Underlying the federal 22 regulatory program rests a policy of assuring 23 that the profits derived from timber sales
24 will inure to the benefit of the Tribe, 25 subject only to administrative expenses incurred by the Federal Government.... The imposition of the taxes at issue would undermine that policy in a context in which the Federal Government has undertaken to regulate the most minute details of timber production and expressed a firm desire that the Tribe should retain the benefits derived from the harvesting and sale of reservation timber.

26 Id. at 149. Second, the Court found that "the taxes would 27 undermine the Secretary's ability to make the wide range of 28

1 determinations committed to his authority concerning the 2 setting of fees and rates with respect to the harvesting and 3 sale of tribal timber." Id. Finally, the Court concluded 4 that "the imposition of state taxes would adversely affect the 5 Tribe's ability to comply with the sustained-yield management 6 policies imposed by federal law." Id. at 149-50. The Court 7 noted, in concluding, that it was "undisputed that the 8 economic burden of the asserted taxes will ultimately fall on 9 the Tribe." Id. at 151.

10 The case before this Court bears many similarities to the 11 situation in White Mountain. The taxes here were also imposed 12 on non-Indian companies, the identical federal regulations 13 governing the harvesting of Indian timber are implicated, and 14 the effect of the tax is to diminish the profit the Tribe 15 would otherwise gain from the sale of its timber.^{2/} Plain-16 tiffs assert, and defendants do not deny, that the day-to-day
17 supervision of tribal timber on the Hoopa reservation by BIA 18 is just as, if not more, extensive than in White Mountain.
19 For example, the BIA established minimum stumpage bid prices, 20 and both the federal government and the Tribe expend large 21 sums each year for timber management and timber sales 22 administration. Defendants concede that neither the State of 23 California nor Humboldt County exercises any regulatory 24 jurisdiction or management over tribal timber and that they 25 expend no unreimbursed funds on tribal timber. (Stipulation 26 of Facts at 55-56.)

27 ///

28

1 Applying the analysis mandated in White Mountain, this 2 court must conduct a particularized inquiry into the state, 3 federal, and tribal interests at stake. The federal and 4 tribal interests at issue are identical to those in White 5 Mountain, and the ways in which the state tax would obstruct 6 federal policies is also the same. Defendants argue that the 7 tax here does not fall under White Mountain because it is not 8 a tax on activity conducted on the reservation, but rather is 9 on ownership of felled timber once title has transferred to a 10 non-Indian. This is a distinction without a difference; the 11 nature of the federal and tribal interests remains the same, 12 as does the existence of a comprehensive federal scheme of 13 regulation with which the state tax interferes.^{3/}

14 In fact, the impact on the federal regulatory scheme is 15 even greater here than in White Mountain because the tax at 16 issue is assessed against the very subject of the regulations 17 - the Indian timber harvested on the reservation. Moreover, 18 the value of the timber is produced entirely on the reser-19 vation. The Supreme Court has recently reaffirmed the 20 importance of the concept that a tribe is entitled to the 21 benefit, free of state taxation, of resources whose value is 22 produced on the reservation. New Mexico v. Mescalero Apache 23 Tribe, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. 2378 (1983); see also 24 Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian 25 Reservation, 447 U.S. 134, 156-57 (1980). The tax here
26 implicates, as did the tax in White Mountain, the Tribe's 27 right to "'receive ... the benefit of whatever profit [the

28

1 forest] is capable of yielding....'" White Mountain, 448 U.S.
2 at 149, quoting 25 C.F.R. §141.3(a)(3) (1979). The fact that 3 the tax does not attach until the timber is sold off the 4 reservation does not result in a different analysis.

5 The state has two possible interests in the tax at issue: 6 a regulatory interest and a revenue interest. The regulatory 7 intent of the statute is clear. The legislative policy 8 underlying the statute included encouraging "prudent and 9 responsible forest resource management calculated to serve the 10 public's need for timber and other forest products, while 11 giving consideration to the public's need for watershed 12 protection, fisheries and wildlife, and recreational oppor-
13 tunities alike in this and future generations." Cal. Rev. & 14 Tax. Code §38101, Historical Note, Section 1(c) (West 1979).
15 It is clear, however, that the state can have no interest in 16 regulating tribal timber. Faced with a similar situation, in 17 which the state of Montana attempted to impose upon non-18 Indians who mined coal from Indian trust land a tax with 19 comparable regulatory purposes, the Ninth Circuit concluded 20 that "[t]his coal is not the state's to regulate, and 21 assertion of such authority diminishes the Tribe's own power 22 to regulate. Such state action conflicts with the 1938 Act's 23 purpose of allowing tribes to control the development of their 24 mineral resources." Crow Tribe of Indians v. Montana, 650
25 F.2d 1104, 1114 (9th Cir. 1981), modified, 665 F.2d 1390, 26 cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. 230 (1982). Not only 27 does the state have no legitimate regulatory interest in 28

1 Indian timber, but the stated regulatory intent of the timber 2 yield tax brings it into even greater conflict with the 3 federal regulatory scheme than was the case in White Mountain.
4 Imposition of the tax directly interferes with the 5 comprehensive Federal timber management and timber sales 6 administration.

7 The state's only real interest, then, is in collecting 8 revenue. The justification proffered by the state for the 9 burden imposed on the Tribe by this tax is that the state 10 provides the Tribe with various valuable services. The 11 Supreme Court has, however, made it clear what state benefits 12 can justify a state tax burden on an Indian tribe. Such a 13 burden will be upheld only if the tax revenue is used to aid 14 the on-reservation activity which is being taxed.

15 The Supreme Court rejected precisely the same argument 16 put forth by defendants here in Ramah Navajo School Board, 17 Inc. v. Bureau of Revenue of New Mexico, 458 U.S. 832 (1982).
18 In that case the Court struck down a tax imposed by the state 19 on the gross receipts received by a non-Indian construction 20 company from a tribal school board for the construction of a 21 school for Indian children on the reservation. The Court 22 wrote:

23 We are similarly unpersuaded by the State's 24 argument that the significant services it 25 provides to the Ramah Navajo Indians justify 26 the imposition of this tax. The State does 27 not suggest that these benefits are in any 28 way related to the construction of schools on Indian land. Furthermore, the evidence introduced below by the State on this issue is far from clear. Although the State does provide services to the Ramah Navajo Indians,

1 it receives federal funds for providing some 2 of these services, and the State conceded at 3 trial that it saves approximately $380,000 by not having to provide education for the Ramah Navajo children.

4 458 U.S. at 845 n.10.

5 Defendants' argument that the state in Ramah Navajo 6 merely failed to prove that it provided significant services
7 to the Indians is contradicted by the Supreme Court's 8 subsequent decision in New Mexico v. Mescalero Apache Tribe, 9 ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. 2378 (1983). There the Court, in 10 enjoining the state from enforcing state game laws against 11 non-Indians for acts done on the reservation, observed that 12 the state had identified "no services it has performed in 13 connection with hunting and fishing by nonmembers" which would 14 justify a game license tax. The Court concluded that the 15 state's "general desire to obtain revenues is simply 16 inadequate to justify the assertion of concurrent jurisdiction 17 in this case." ___ U.S. ___, 103 S. Ct. at 2391.

18 Finally, the Ninth Circuit had come to the same 19 conclusion even earlier. In Crow Tribe v. Montana, involving 20 a state attempt to tax coal mined from Indian trust land, as 21 discussed above, the court considered that one main purpose of 22 the tax at issue was to preserve the value of the coal for 23 future generations. In rejecting the state's attempt to 24 impose a tax, the court concluded: "To the extent that this 25 tax is not related to the actual governmental costs associated 26 with the mining of the Indian coal, ... the state's interest
27 in acquiring revenues is weak in comparison with the Tribe's 28

1 right to the bounty from its own land." 650 F.2d at 1117 2 (cites omitted).^{4/}

3 In light of the Supreme Court's statements in Ramah
4 Navajo and Mescalero Apache Tribe, and the Ninth Circuit's
5 opinion in Crow Tribe, defendants cannot rely on general
6 services provided to the Tribe to justify this tax.^{5/} 7 Revenues from the timber yield tax go into a general fund and 8 in no way support development of Indian timber. As noted 9 above, the state has stipulated that it expends no reimbursed 10 state funds with respect to timber or timber lands inside the 11 reservation. Thus, the state's general interest in collecting 12 revenue is insufficient when weighed against the federal and 13 tribal interests at stake, under the White Mountain 14 analysis.^{6/}

15 CONCLUSION

16 Having conducted the particularized inquiry into the 17 nature of the state, federal, and tribal interests at stake as 18 prescribed by the Supreme Court, the court finds that the 19 exercise of state authority in assessing the timber yield tax 20 against companies which purchase Tribal timber from BIA or 21 from HTC is preempted by the pervasive federal regulation of 22 Indian timber and is thus in violation of federal law.

23 Accordingly,

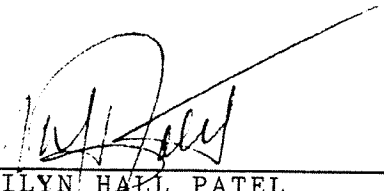

24 IT IS ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion for partial summary 25 judgment be GRANTED and that defendants' motion for partial 26 summary judgment be DENIED.

3 1/ The court notes with some astonishment that defendants 4 failed even to cite White Mountain, or any other case relied 5 on by plaintiffs, in their moving papers. In view of the 6 obvious relevance of White Mountain and the other cases, there 7 is no excuse for defendants' attempt to skirt the issues they 8 raise. Defendants' reliance in their moving papers on 9 Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Texas Co., 336 U.S. 342 (1949) is 10 spurious. Not only was no Indian tribe a party in Oklahoma 11 Tax Commission, but the Court in no way considered Indian 12 interests and in fact noted that there was no possibility the 13 economic incidence of the tax could fall on the tribe. Id. at 14 353. This 1949 case which did not even discuss the analysis
15 to be applied when a state tax burdens an Indian tribe has no 16 application to the case at bar and it and other cases cited by 17 defendants obviously cannot insulate defendants from the 18 analysis mandated by White Mountain and other recent cases.

11 2/ Defendants concede that the economic burden of the taxes
12 falls at least in part on the Tribe, although the parties 13 disagree as to the extent to which the burden is passed on to 14 the Tribe. (Stipulation of Facts at 71-72).

14 3/ Defendants' arguments that White Mountain is inapplicable 15 because the private companies upon whom the tax is directly 16 assessed conduct most of their business off the reservation 17 and thus benefit from a full range of state and county 18 services was rejected outright in Ramah Navajo School Board,
19 Inc. v. Bureau of Revenue of New Mexico, 458 U.S. 832, 843-44
20 & n.9 (1982), as defendants concede. There is thus no need 21 for the court to address this argument.

18 4/ Defendants' attempt to rely on Crow Tribe to support 19 their own position is misplaced. The court's remark that "[a] 20 tax carefully tailored to effectuate the state's legitimate 21 interests might survive," 650 F.2d at 1114, was made in the 22 context of detailed examples given by the court of govern-23 mental costs associated with the mining itself, which the 24 state could have perhaps tried to recover through a tax 25 tailored to those costs.

23 5/ Defendants argue that the Supreme Court in White Mountain 24 "accepted" the state's taxation of the use of state highways
25 within the reservation, and that because those tax revenues 26 were not used to develop Indian timber, taxes on any on-27 reservation activity must be acceptable if other general 28 services are provided. The short response to this argument is that the Supreme Court in White Mountain never addressed the state's taxation of state highway use at all. The Court clearly stated that for purposes of that action petitioners had conceded liability for taxes attributable to use of state

1 highways within the reservation. 448 U.S. at 140 n.6. Those 2 taxes were never challenged and were never at issue. No inference can be drawn from a matter which was not before the Court.

3 6/ The court notes defendants' argument that the county will 4 have no incentive to provide services to the Tribe if the Tribe does not sufficiently contribute to revenues is contrary 5 to a line of California cases beginning with Serrano v.
Priest, 18 Cal. 3d 728 (1976). In light of the court's 6 conclusion based on White Mountain and subsequent cases, the court need not reach this issue.
